

Ladies Are Few

Editor of The Bee — Sir: I for one heartily agree with J. L. Priest whose letter "God Forbid" appeared Sept. 1. Women's place is in the home. Man is definitely the head of the family; but women of today are wanting equality and more rights. Sitting in bars, smoking, drinking right along with men, wearing mini skirts, shorts or pants. Yet, they still expect men to respect them, bow to them, and uphold them as fine examples of pure womanhood. When they don't receive all this, they call for the law to protect them.

God made women to be man's helpmate. Man will and does respect a "lady." But there are very few who fill that category any more. Let the women keep their place in the house, not keep trying for equality which is an insult to God, sex and humanity. Women need to learn a lesson from their immodest dress and by their conduct, and get back to being "a lady."
